Take the lead with vision and confidence.

Nonprofit organizations exist to fulfill a vital mission—to improve the lives of people, strengthen communities, and address a wide range of societal challenges. One of the most important factors in predicting an organization’s ability to achieve its goals and maximize its impact is the ability of its leadership team to ensure long-term sustainability and continued effectiveness of strategic business practices.

The emerging nonprofit leader requires a master’s program specifically designed for an environment where success is measured by its valued work as well as its fiscal sustainability and strategic vision and growth. The Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management has reaped the benefits of the Springfield College 130-year history in leadership development and continues to prepare talented nonprofit managers to strategically lead their organizations.

Your career outlook is bright.

Now is the right time to pursue your Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management. That’s because positions for social and community service managers, directors, and leaders are expected to grow 18 percent between now and 2026, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Graduates of the Springfield College Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management are finding that they are well-positioned to fill jobs within non- and for-profit companies. This degree will prepare you to make a positive difference for these organizations.

Who is this program for?

The MBA in nonprofit management is for people who want to make a difference in their communities and workplaces. Though it’s ideal for employees of nonprofits, they aren’t the only students who can benefit. In fact, most companies today are looking to make positive social investments and need employees who understand the connection between for-profit and nonprofit industries. We consider the MBA in nonprofit management to be an “MBA-plus” program. This means that you learn all about traditional business management while also learning to lead a nonprofit organization and apply your business acumen to the nonprofit world.

Flexible program delivery works with your work schedule.

The Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management at Springfield College can be completed in one year of full-time study (10 courses). Part-time study is also an option.

You’ll find that the Springfield College Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management is a hands-on and project-based program, which blends theory and practical application in collaboration with community organizations. Start maximizing your impact now.
