Take the lead with vision and confidence.
Nonprofit organizations exist to fulfill a mission, often related to serving people, communities, members, or social causes. Nonprofits reinvest surplus revenues to further their missions, and to address societal challenges. One of the most important factors in predicting an organization’s ability to achieve its mission is the quality of its leadership team.

The developing nonprofit leader requires a master’s program specifically designed for an environment where success is measured by impact and the bottom line. The Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management has reaped the benefits of the Springfield College 130-year history in leadership development and continues to prepare talented, nonprofit leaders.
