“The Master of Business Administration in nonprofit management helped me to develop the skills that are fundamental in leading a nonprofit organization, as well as to build the professional network that is critical in my field. After graduating, I made important leadership connections within my organization and cultivated relationships with the local nonprofit community.”

Xiomara Pique Hart '11, MBA'19

Take the lead with vision and confidence.

Nonprofit organizations exist to fulfill a vital mission—to improve the lives of people, strengthen communities, and address a wide range of societal challenges. One of the most important factors in predicting an organization's ability to achieve its goals and maximize its impact is the ability of its leadership team to ensure long-term sustainability and continued effectiveness of strategic business practices.

The emerging nonprofit leader requires a master's program specifically designed for an environment where success is measured by its valued work as well as its fiscal sustainability and strategic vision and growth. The Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management has reaped the benefits of the Springfield College 135-year history in leadership development and continues to prepare talented nonprofit managers to strategically lead their organizations.

Your career outlook is bright.

Now is the right time to pursue your Master of Business Administration with a concentration in nonprofit management. That's because positions for social and community service managers, directors, and leaders are expected to grow 18 percent between now and 2026, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Graduates of the Springfield College Master of Business Administration (MBA) with a concentration in nonprofit management are finding that they are well-positioned to fill jobs within non- and for-profit companies. This degree will prepare you to make a positive difference for these organizations.

Who is this program for?

The MBA in nonprofit management is for people who want to make a difference in their communities and workplaces. Though it's ideal for employees of nonprofits, they aren't the only students who can benefit. In fact, most companies today are looking to make positive social investments and need employees who understand the connection between for-profit and nonprofit industries. We consider the MBA in nonprofit management to be an “MBA-plus” program. This means that you learn all about traditional business management while also learning to lead a nonprofit organization and apply your business acumen to the nonprofit world.
